Let's have ice cream!

1 Antietam

The site of the bloodiest day of the civil war - Sept 17, 1862 - 23,000 casualties. What is less known is the cause of this particular day of conflict. There was only one five gallon container of chocolate ice cream! It was located on a bluff between the two armies and the fighting was fierce. Clara Barton did her best to get the ice cream out of the sun but to no avail. Not only were the casualties high but the ice cream melted. It was a sad day for all.

2 Harpers Ferry

This historic town was settled in the 1730's. It was bought to prominence in 1859 when the abolitionist John Brown led a raid on the town. You passed by the jail where John Brown was kept. He was driven insane by constant cruel torture. Twenty four hours a day men would stand just out of reach of the bars of his cell and slowly eat scoop after scoop of ice cream while describing the delicious flavors and texture in minute detail to him. No one could withstand such horrible treatment!
